

The U.S. government can give emergency relief and assistance to state and local governments after natural disasters.

The U.S. government gives funding to the state for schools so they have the resources needed for students.

State law enforcement makes sure citizens are following both state and national laws.

Judicial decisions made by the U.S. Supreme Court are enforced by state governments.